Girl Pleaded with Cary, Begging Him Not to Forsake Her-Wife Identified Her Body and Funeral Is Stopped.

While Mrs. Arthur L. Cary, the beau tiful wife of the wealthy publisher and htsman who is suing him for diforce, sat in one room of Coroner Wiesper's offices at New Rochelle today and asserted that the conduct of the young woman who committed sulside in her husband's apartment formed the basis of her divorce action, in which the young woman was named as Marthe Hanlon, the yachtsman discoursed eloquently in another room of the dead girl's estimable qualities, insisting at ne time that her right name was

Mr. Cary was present at the funeral services held in the rooms of Under-taker George T. Davis. He showed considerable emotion during the services and later told the story of his relations with the unfortunate young woman to an Evening World reporter. Pity Was Aroused.

"This girl was known to me as Martha Bond," said Mr. Cary, "and I that she was absolutely without friends I was moved to pity and compassion.

"She had no money and no one to appeal to, and I took her into my home entirely out of sympathy. Any one who saw this young woman could not accuse me of any other relations toward her than philanthropy. I gave her a home, paid all her expenses and gave

"I told my sister," continued Mr. Cary when I took her into my home, 'Sister, it will never do to let this poor little one to look after her.' Then we brought her to our home in New Rochelle and provided for her. She lived there just as a companion for my sister. I did everything I could for her in life and will do all in my power for her in death. There was absolutely no motive for her grief which urged her to end her life other than her despair at the death of her dor she was compelled to

Though Mr. and Mrs. Cary remained for several hours in Coroner Wiesendanger's offices they did not meet. Mrs. Cary was beautifully gowned, and wore me jewelry. She said her only interest in the case was that the girl should be buried under her prope name, so that the evidence in her divorce suit could be certified properly.
When told of her husband's statement she recalled the declaration her husband made to her a year ago.

The publisher then was living in the same apartment with his sister and Miss Hanlon. Reports had come to Mrs. Cary that urged her to make an im one evening last May.

From time to time, Miss Hughes says, she was given costly presents by Chalmes, who told her he was a member of the Chalmes family. Among the presnts were a diamond locket and a silver-mounted chatelaine bag. Chalmes all the while wore expensive clothes and never wore the same articles of jewelry twice.

Miss Hughes told the police that Chalmes showed her the costly dining hall of the Holland House and pointed out to her the place where his family sat at dinner. But at no time did young Chalmes offer to present the young lady to his parents, a meeting which Miss Hughes sought, but did not suggest to her friend.

Finally Chalmes spoke of marrying the girl, and she consented. On April 18 last the ceremony was performed.

Mrs. Mary Hughes, the mother of the young actress, said to-day that she and her daughter would stick to Chalmes in spite of the deception he had practiced.
